During the occupancy of the New York city hall by the federal congress, from January 11. 1785, to October 21, 1788, members were granted the use of the books belonging to the New York Society Library, then located in the city hall and numbering about 3,000 volumes.

The first step in Congress in the direction of procuring a library for the use of its members was taken in the House of Representatives. August 6, 1789, when Mr. Gerry moved that a committee be appoint of the expense, and the best mode of procuring them. The motion was ordered to lie on the table. This same action was re-peated two years later, but this time the matter progressed a little farther in that the committee was appointed and made a report. The report, however, was laid on Congress continued to use borrowed books until its removal to Washington. In the act which provided for the establishment of the seat of government in this city a section was inserted which is really the till his death, April 8, 1807, and on Novem-corner stone of the present magnificent in-stitution.

By this act $5,000 was appropriated for the purchase of books and for fitting up a suitable apartment in the Capitol to con-tain them, the purchase to be made by the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives, under "such directions as shall be given, and such cata-logue as shall be furnished by a joint committee of both houses of Congress, to be appointed for that purpose."

A Modest Beginning.

The next act dealing with the library was passed January 26, 1802, and provided for placing in one room of the Capitol the books which had been purchased by the first appropriation, together with the books or libraries which had been kept separately by each house. It authorized the making of suitable rules and regulations by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the appointment by the President of a librarian at a salary not to exceed $2 per diem of necessary attendance. The unexpended bal-ance of the sum of $5,000 appropriated by the act of April 24, 1800, and all sums later appropriated, to be expended under the di-books and housed in the most magnificent building in the nation—is a tale which has been presented in chronological order in the supplemental section of Librarian Herbert Putnam's latest annual report.

Wide Range of Subjects.

It is interesting to note the character of the books whose titles are given in the first catalogue of the library, issued in April, 1802. Senator Mitchell, in a report from the Senate library committee, January 20, 1806, states that the aim in purchasing books should be "to furnish the library with such materials as will enable statesmen to be correct in their investigations, and by a becoming display of erudition and research give a higher dignity and a brighter luster to truth." The wide range of subjects cov-ered by the small collection of less than 1.000 volumes shows that a well-directed history, geography, politics, political econ-omy, theology and translations of the Greek and Roman classics. Light reading is represented by a set of the British Es-sayists. Fiction is entirely absent, and the only poet admitted is Burns.

Four other catalogues were issued be-tween this date and 1812, the last catalogue printed prior to the destruction of the library in 1814. The catalogue published in 1812 filled 101 octavo pages and contained the titles of 3,076 volumes and fifty-three maps, charts and plans. As this catalogue was printed toward the end of the year it gives approximately the contents of the library when it was destroyed eighteen months later. An additional appropriation of $1,000 yearly for five years was made February 21, 1806, and a similar sum De-cember 6, 1811. These three appropriations of $5,000 each, with annual appropriations for the salary of the librarian and for contingent expenses, amounting to a little over $9,000, comprise the whole sum appropriated for the support of the library prior to its destruction by the British soldiers, August 24, 1814, and of this sum from $2,000 to $3,000 had not then been expended. John Beckley remained in charge of the library and the salary and the

Some of the rules and regulations as printed in the catalogue of 1808, and in an amended and revised form in the catalogue of 1815, are curious and amusing, and seem to have been designed to safeguard and restrict the use of the books rather than to provide for their free use. A folio was to be returned within three weeks, a quarto within two, and an octavo or duodecimo within one. No member was to "receive more than one folio, one quarto or two octavos or duodecimos within the terms aforesaid, unless where so connected as to be otherwise useless." The penalties for the detention of a book beyond the time allowed were severe: For a folio, $3 per day; for a quarto, $2, and for an octavo, $1. This was modified in the revision of 1812 to $1 for a folio, 50 cents for a quarto and 25 cents. and 25 cents for an octavo. The fines were still further reduced in 1816. The President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, however, might for good cause remit the penalty in whole or part. No book was to be issued within ten days of the termina-tion of a session of Congress, and all books were to be returned five days before ad-

When the British soldiers, under the command of Gen. Ross, burned the Capitol. August 24, 1814, the library, then consisting of a little over 3,000 volumes, was destroyed. Less than a month after this, on September 21, 1814, ex-President Jefferson, September 21, 1814, ex-President Jefferson, who had always taken an interest in the library, wrote from Monticello to his friend, Samuel Harrison Smith, founder of the National Intelligencer, asking him to tender his library to the library committee of Congress. This was done, and Congress, October 21, 1814, authorized the library committee to contract for the nurshess of the library. tee to contract for the purchase of the li-brary, and on January 30, 1815, after some discussion, an act was passed authorizing the committee to draw from the treasury the sum of $23,950, to be applied to the purchase. This collection contained not quite 7,000 volumes, and has been described by Mr. Spofford as "an admirable selection of the best ancient and modern literature up to the beginning of the property."

The catalogue of the collection was prepared by Jefferson himself, and published in 1815. The system of classification used was based upon Lord Bacon's division of knowledge, and this system was maintained in the arrangement of the books on the shelves and in the catalogues of the Removal to Washington.

Early in May, 1815, the Jefferson library was packed in wagens and sent to Washington. It was first placed in a room in the hotel building temporarily occupied by Congress, and remained there for three years while the north wing of the Capitol was being rebuilt. It was then, in 1819, removed to rooms in the north wing of the Capitol, and ultimately placed in the long hall occupying the western front of the and more disastrous fire occurred, caused by a defective flue, and out of 55,000 vol-umes only 20,000 were saved. The portion saved included the divisions of jurisprudence, political science and American history and biography. Two-thirds of the Jefferson collection were destroyed in this The New Building.

As early as 1871 Mr. Spofford, in his annual report for that year, called attention to the crowded condition of the library, and recommended that Congress take action looking to the erection of a library building to accommodate the rapidly growing collection. The first step in this direction was taken when Congress, by the act of March 3, 1873, created a commission to select a plan for a building for the library, and appropriated $5,000 to procure plans. Finally after nearly fifteen years of discussion and postponement, an act was passed April 15, 1886, authorizing the construction of a building substantially ac-cording to the plan submitted to a joint select committee by John L. Smithmeyer in the Italian renaissance style of architecture, with such modifications as might be found necessary or advantageous, construction of the building was place charge of a commission composed of the the Capitol extension and the librarian of were appropriated to commence the construction of the building and $550,000 to purchase the site. By act of October 2, 1888, this commission was abolished, and the construction placed under the direction of Gen. Thomas L. Casey, the chief of engineers of the army. The original designs for the building were furnished by John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz, and the architectural details were worked out by Paul J. Pelz and Edward P. Casey. Upon the death of Gen. Casey, March 25, 1896, the charge of the construction devolved upon Bernard R. Green, and under his superin-tendence the building was completed February 28, 1897, at a cost of $6,347,000, ex-clusive of the land, which cost $585,000.

Rapid Growth.

The rapid growth of the library dates from the appointment of Mr. Spofford as librarian at the end of 1864. The sources of increase were then, as now, regular annual appropriations by Congress, special appropriations, deposits under the copyright law, gifts, international exchanges and, beginning in 1866, the additions to the Smithsonian collection of publications of learned so-hall occupying the western front of the newly erected center of the Capitol, and here it remained—except for a short period after the fire of 1851, when it was temporarily housed in adjoining committee rooms—until the removal to the new building.

For a period of thirty-six years, from the foundation of the existing collection by the acquisition of Jefferson's library, the library increased gradually, mainly by purchase, until it numbered 55,000 volumes, being an average annual increase of over 1,300 volumes.

THE FIELD OF CLOVER. By Laurence Housman Illustrations by Clemence Housman. New York: John Lane.

Highly artistic wood engravings and charmingly told fairy stories vie with each other in this book for prime interest. The conceptions are unique in both directions. The stories are somewhat allegorical and fascinating. The pictures have a strong individuality, while the process employed has enabled the artist to present effects seldom seen in these days of washa past period. The reader is entertained on the first page by the announcement that "the afternoon strove through the drawn blinds palely" and he has much more of drawings and half-tone reproduction. Lovers of fine engraving will rejoice at this work as a sign of a return in appropriate instances to the more suggestive art of the the same kind. statices to the more suggestive art of the graver's tool. There is some confusion attendant upon the appearance of this volume of what is announced by the Indianapolis publishers as "The Dowden Shakespeare." Bearing the imprint of the American house, it is also ascribed to an Edinburgh press, indicating that it is being handled in this country simultaneously with its appearance in Great Britain. Although described in the accompanying announcements as the editorial product of Edward Dowden, the famous Shakespearan scholar, the individual volume bears no reference whatever to him. There is some confusion attendant upon It is easy enough to get to the north pole—in fiction—but as far as this story serves to indicate it is not so easy to get away from there. The author merely provides a stray balloon, stored with food, floating over the ice flot, upon which four polar explorers are waiting for death as the means of attaining the "farthest north." That part is simple enough. Balloons are not hard to find if the arctic region. But having reached the polar neighborhood—although, by the way, the voyagers forgot to visit the pole itself—the adventurers become so engrossed in thrilling experiences with cultured Norsemen, fierce warriors and half-bestial savages, not to mention antedliuvian animals, involving them in wars, escapades and love affairs, that they seem to forget all about the return trip. They are there yet, presumably, their balloon snugly housed in a kiosk on the public plaza of the highly organized communistic city of the Runesmen, on the edge of the polar pit, and themselves resting content in matrimony, each having found a wife of surpassing beauty. It would have been more satisfactory had the individual parts of so interesting an edition borne the mark of the scholarship of Dr. Dowden. The purpose of the edition is to furnish a Shakespeare, each play constituting a volume, which will strike a happy medium in the presentation of notes for the explanation and discussion of the text and will not take undue liberties. These sketches of wild-fowl shooting in the Great South bay, Long Island, are interesting to more than the devotees of that sport, for they tell of the game with a vivacity almost as entertaining as fiction. The practical hints as to the selection and use of weapons are associated with the narrative of experiences in a manner to disguise their technicality, while the sportsmen engaged in the scenes depicted discuss the ethics of wild-fowl shooting instruc-tively. The lesson of the book is that there is need of wiser laws for the protection of food birds in the region frequented by them. Discussing a moot point as to the gauge of bird shot, Scth Fielding of the story says: "All men are not alike in their consideration of wild-fowling. I think all gentle sportsmen will approve of my cal and present no difficulties for children's voices. The fillustrations include, besides numerous half-tones in black, many color prints which add much to the appearance idea of the sport, but all men who use shot guns are not sportsmen, any more than the bungler who fishes with a chalk line and a horseshoe sinker may be termed an angler.

No sportsman of today cares to bring down more than one bird with each barrel, and

THE ENGLISH WIFE.

Home and Abroad."

An American Describes Her as Hamble and Patient.

"The English wife is perhaps of all wives the most devoted, perhaps we may say the most humble, patient and abject of wives," declared Mrs. Emil L. Boas before a meetng of the Women's Alliance of the Lenox Avenue Unitarian Church, held in the church yesterday afternoon. The subject of her paper was "Woman in Society at the speaker, and she cited as a case in point that of a man in good society, who took it as a matter of course that his wife should walk up five flights of stairs in a hotel to get his overcoat. In speaking of the leading characteristics of the French-woman the speaker said: "We do not realize how closely the life of a mother in France is bound up with that of her children. Love through the very circumstances (arranged marriages) can rarely exist before marriage, and often does not come afterward, so that the woman's compensation comes through her affection for her children, and all her love and devotion.

A deposit of $200 her children, and all her love and devotion are concentrated upon them." The German "hausfrau" was summed up as essentially domestic in her tastes and life.

The American girl, Mrs. Boas said, has blended in her all the instincts and attri-butes of the women of other nations, and in addition enjoys all the advantages of the untrammeled, unfettered life and educational advantages of this country. "She has just a little too much adoration," continued the speaker. "She must be worthy of her inheritance, and the liberty she en-The joys must not become license.

Mrs. Henry T. Peirce, who spoke of women in political life, said in part: "This is a time of wild agitation concerning the portion of power that belongs to women, and the old-time lady has stepped aside to avoid being run over by the wheels of the new woman. In times past woman has been able to influence the affairs of men, because she has not attempted to direct their affairs. In the future she can maintain her power only by being as well educated as men are, by knowing the things that men know as well as men know them, and by using the knowledge to supplement men's work in the world-not to usurp it.

Miss Clarita Spencer, who is an under-graduate at Barnard, and the editor of one of the papers published by the students, gave a brief extemporaneous address on the American girl. She expressed the conthe American girl. She expressed the con-viction that college life is of the greatest value in fostering a democratic spirit of mutual helpfulness. Those from the high-est and the lowest walks of life met on terms of equality, and this was helping to make the ideal woman.
